Our Journey in Faith

One of the great discoveries of my life was the joy of meeting new people. Being secure in my own identity and history I have been intrigued with people of different backgrounds and cultures and finding the diverse yet similar ways we all have in living and coping with challenges of everyday life. Having spent twenty-five years in education and near eighteen in an Italian national parish with a growing Spanish population I enjoyed a wonderful mix of people who taught me a great deal. The parish was settled by immigrants one hundred years ago. It was a place wherein they found stability and identity, a link with the past, yet a place whereby they collectively and individually would accustom themselves to live in a new and vibrant environment. New language, jobs and ways of doing things were met with gusto, yet there was an unwillingness to leave all behind; their religious faith, their family ties, their food and customs and their native tongue. The Italian contribution to our country has been enormous.

For the past few decades Hispanics began arriving in my parish. Most were from Central and South America as well as Mexico and Guatemala. They came to support families back home which suffered from lack of employment and with few, if any, services to the poor. Faced with no work, unstable social structures, and no hope for the future they entered our country oftentimes without papers. They felt forced to do this! Because so many are unskilled, except in agriculture and related areas of employment, their presence was both sought after and rejected. During a time of economic uncertainty with many manufacturing jobs outsourced to China, Korea, Thailand and India, what ordinarily was made in the U.S. now is imported from abroad. Consequently few jobs are available for this group of people.

The Hispanics (Latinos) are a proud people and it was my pleasure to serve them. Over 68% are Catholic and their faith is joyous, emotional, and charismatic. They love to sing often accompanied with instruments brought from their countries. Their families are large, yet there is much love. Faced with uncertainty

#489 St. Paul the Apostle Pg 2

both at home and here, they seek a more secure life. They aspire to be accepted, to be treated as a brother or sister, to gain security (a path to citizenship).

We are reminded in our first reading from the book of Exodus: "You shall not molest or oppose an alien. For you were once aliens yourselves... If you ever wrong them and they cry out to me, I will surely hear their cry... for I am compassionate." So too must we be compassionate.

Fr. James F. Healy
