Our Journey in Faith

One of the problems faced by both Jews and Christians is our task of speaking about God who transcends all human experience. The Jews were very conscious of not making God respond in the same ways as His creatures. In technical language it means not to anthropomorphize God (make God human) so we must always be conscious that our descriptive language of God is always analogical (based on analogies taken from man). As the scripture refers to God as being "Holy", it means that God is other than this world. This attribute of God comes from the Hebrew, qadosh, meaning separate from, different than the created universe. We must always remember this as we praise and worship His eternal presence.

With Christ, the Son of God, we have the incarnate presence of God in the form of man. We describe this as one God in the person of His Son who has both a human and divine nature. God teaches us in human terms while at the same time retaining His divine nature. With the person of Jesus, the Son of God, we have to distinguish both the miraculously divine character of His words and actions from that which is human in its highest perfection.

An example is that of the Gospel today wherein many men working for different periods of time are paid the same wage. Was this just or not? To Jesus, this was not a question of justice but one of generosity. Cannot an all merciful person, God, exceed the bounds of justice and act, not against justice, but mercifully and generously towards those whom he has created. St. Paul refers to this act as God's super-abundant love; no limits, no boundaries to God's merciful love.

Fr. James F. Healy

#489 St. Paul the Apostle Pg 2

Wow! It went like clock-work. On Sept. 14th, the families of our Rel. Ed. Program gathered at the 9:15 Mass to worship and to join in commissioning our catechists and helpers to minister God's love to our children and to instruct them as Jesus did.

The archdiocese wants us to have a meal & a project so that families can "eat" together and "work" together. Thanks to Mr. James Murray who donated the eggs, bacon, sausages, etc. and Mr. Rocco Vitulli, our "Master Chef", who prepared the breakfast. Many thanks to our catechists and helpers who so generously set-up and with the parents cleaned-up.
